Answer/Key for "Reasons for Delay" Workshop Activity

Study Location: The Study Timeline notes that participation may occur in-person and via Zoom, while the consent materials only note that participation will occur remotely via Zoom.

Method of Consent: The Study Timeline notes that participants will verbally consent; however, the consent form includes a signature page, implying that signed consent will be obtained.

Inconsistent Duration: The Study Timeline and Consent document are not consistent on how long the interviews will take.

Follow-up Interviews: The Study Timeline notes that there will be follow-up interviews; however, the consent document never mentions this as a possibility.

Compensation Timeline: The consent materials imply immediate payment, while the study timeline indicates that payment will be issued one week following participation.

"What happens to the information collected for the research?": This section of the consent includes a reference to biospecimens that is not applicable and may confuse participants.

Handling of Transcriptions: The study timeline notes that once transcriptions are de-identified there will be no link to the participant. However, the consent states the transcriptions will be de-identified and assigned a code that will be linked to participant names.

Transcription Review: The Study Timeline attachment does not reference transcription review procedures. Additionally, the timeline notes that there will be no way to link participants to their data once transcripts are de-identified; this implies that participants will not be able to withdraw their data after this point. The consent describes a transcription review process and indicates that data can be withdrawn until researchers have started data analysis.
